

LEBOSKEY SPRINGS IMPORTANT QUESTIONS IN ARGUMENT.

Did Len Busby present statistics showing the salaries of car company presidents in other cities when he induced the directors of the Surface Lines to allot him a salary of $60,000 for being president? Did Busby take into consideration the plea presented by the company in the arbitration hearing that the Surface Lines are fast approaching the point of bankruptcy?

These questions were asked by Jacob LeBoskey, attorney for the street car men in his opening argument before the arbitration board today.

Busby's main contention when on the witness stand was that the wages paid Chicago car men should be based upon wages paid in other cities. Yet Busby is not basing his salary on what other street car company presidents are getting, else he would scarcely be getting $60,000 a year.

George Miller, attorney for the company, followed LeBoskey with his arguments this afternoon. Samuel Alschuler will close for the men. Then the case will go to the arbitration board for decision.
